Language Arts: Intensive Reading and Writing (Grades 5-8)

Class Description: This course provides an intensive reading and writing experience using literature chosen from Newberry Medal and Honor winners and by using the Institute for Excellence in Writing (IEW) curriculum.

For reading, books are grouped thematically over the months of the course. With their parents’ help, students will choose novels from each group to read and interact with, using online resources.

The writing portion of the course will use Excellence in Writing (IEW) and will cover paragraph writing intensively. The instruction contained on the IEW DVD lessons teaches outlining and the structure of a paragraph. Students will learn how to construct a paragraph including a topic sentence, expansion with details and examples, and a concluding sentence. Sentence construction and fluency will be addressed as well through practice with “dress-ups;” learning to start each sentence with a different construction, avoiding “banned” (tired and worn out) words, and using clauses to change sentence tempo and pace. A larger report assignment comes toward the end.

READING
The book lists included here are intended to provide choices that fit the criteria of being Newbery Award winners or honors, fit the genre for the month(s), make it possible to not repeat a book read in an earlier year, and customize for age, grade, and reading ability. Parent and student should participate in selection and number of books. (Tips: Check out www.goodreads.com to read a synopsis as well as reviews of specific titles. Try varying the manner in which the book is read: silently, out loud by the student, out loud by the parent, or even listening on tape or online.)

General reading format:
The student will read 20 - 30 minutes a day, 4 times a week and will keep a reading journal. Students will write for 5-10 minutes a day about what they have read. (The writing does not need to be a summary; write your reaction to what you have read, a connection you made, or something the reading reminded you of; describe a character in detail, give your opinion about something you’ve read, etc.) Students will complete at least two activities for each novel on their non-reading day each week.
(Activities for reading: Using the suggested websites below or others that you find for discussion questions, activities, resources, chapter quizzes, and/or a final book quiz to test your reading comprehension.
